LUMO CONSERVANCY PHOTO HIDE

LUMO CONSERVANCY

BUILT INTO THE BLUFF

The Lumo Conservancy Photo Hide sits at the bottom of Soroi Lions Bluff Hill in the Lumo Community Wildlife Sanctuary, which borders Tsavo West. It is a sunken hide overlooking a floodlit waterhole, built for eye-level wildlife photography and long sits.

It is shared by guests of all three Lumo properties: Soroi Lions Bluff Lodge, Soroi Leopards Lair and Soroi Cheetah Tented Camp.

DAYLIGHT AND DARK

Sit through the golden hours, or stay for the night when the waterhole lights come on.

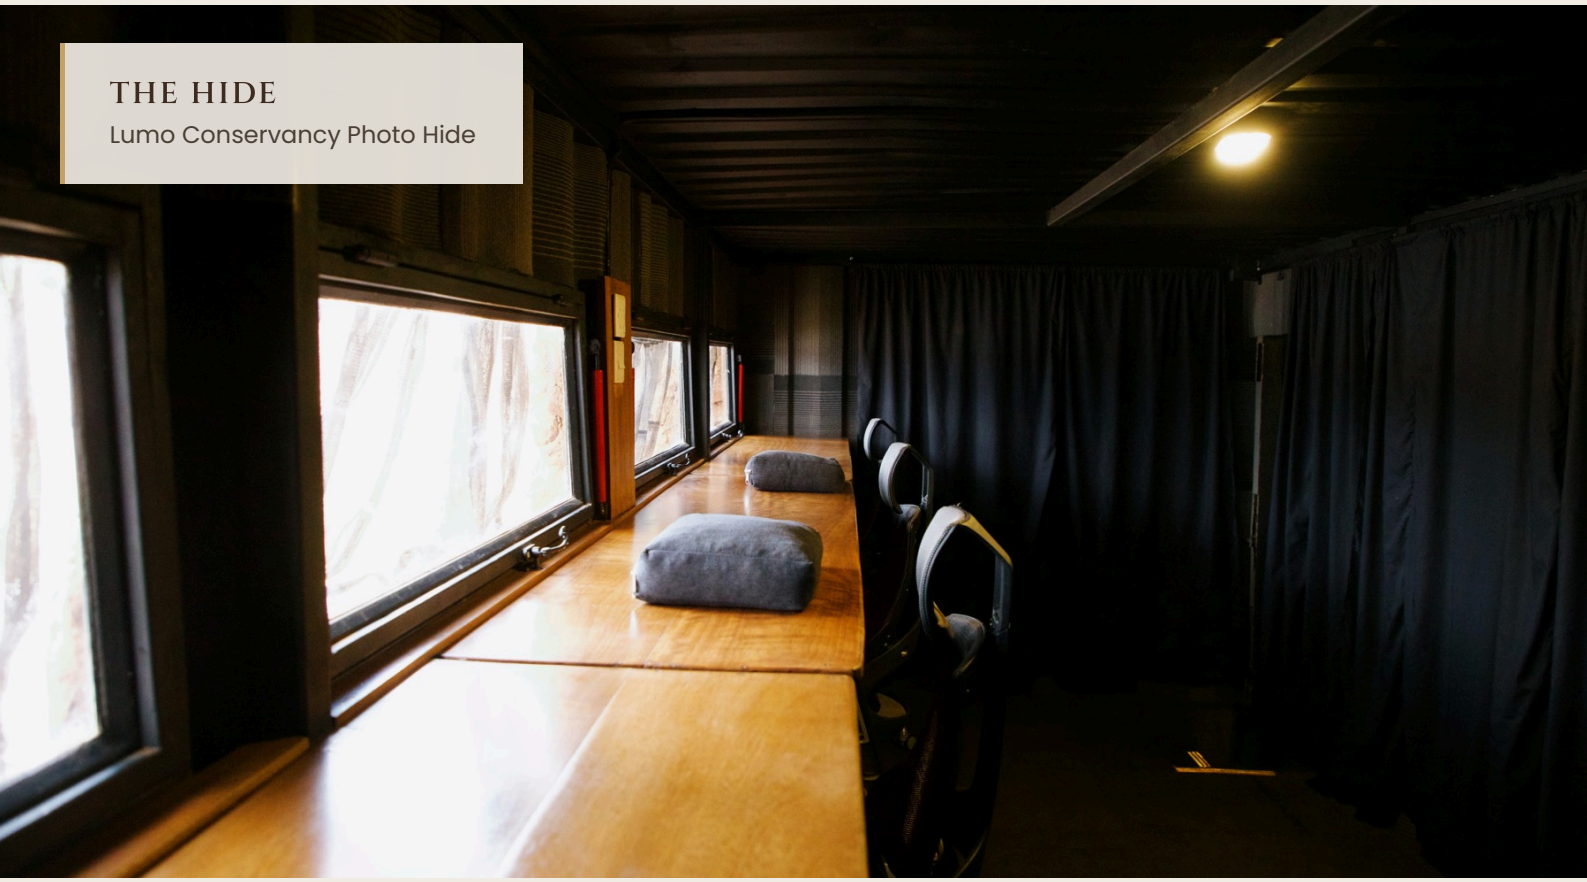

FOR EVERY LEVEL

The hide suits the keen amateur and the seasoned professional alike.

WHAT COMES TO THE WATER

LUMO CONSERVANCY HIDE · WILDLIFE

> "THE BEST HIDE IN THE REGION FOR ELEPHANTS!"
>
> Federico Veronesi · Wildlife Photographer of the Year 2026, Natural History Museum, London

Lumo does not keep a season-long tally, but the camera records what comes to the water. These are some of the visitors from recent sits.

YOUNG LIONS

A young pride of lions works this waterhole on quiet dry-season nights, mothers and cubs first, the rest of the group holding back in the treeline until the coast is clear.

FIRST LIGHT, LAST LIGHT

Lumo's leopards favour the in-between hours of dusk and first light, when the glass goes from mirror to window.

THE SHY ONE

Servals are notoriously hard to see anywhere, long-legged and quick to spook. One has been seen drinking at the edge of the light.

GENTLE GIANTS

Eland, Africa's largest antelope, work the shallows at the water's edge, a species most guests rarely see this close on a game drive.

AND MANY MORE

Elephants, plains zebra, spotted hyena, Verreaux's eagle-owl and black-faced sandgrouse have also come to the water.
